Mixed reaction greets initial Santa Rita prison tour

Nearly two dozen members of the press, Alameda County Grand Juries and civilians were ushered through Santa Rita Rehabilitation Center Monday night on the first of six "booked solid"

Acting Chief Walter Cordon told the assem-bled members the Sheriff's Department had been working on the tours for "quite awhile," emphasizing the walk-throughs are not reaction to public television station KQED's pending law suit over the department's closed door

KQED and the NAACP sued Alameda County Sheriff Tom Houchins and the Board of Supervisors when the station Newsroom was denied access to the facility following the suicide of an unsentenced inmate.

Cameras, recorders and interviews have been denied tour members in all six treks.

Supervisors and Sheriff Tom Houchins have argued that cameras and recorders would compromise inmates' rights.

"We tried to give you a general, overall view (of the jail) with the exception of interviews and cameras," Cordon said.

Two members of a former county grand jury noted "great improve-ments in the last five years" since the jury studied the site and made sweeping recommenda-

"It's about time, with all the adverse publicity we've gotten, that we let people see with their own eyes what we've got to work with," Cordon said, adding the constant theme of the tour: "We're doing the best with the facility we've got."

The grounds are moderately well manicured and adequately populated with more than 999 inmates — the head count from Monday night's meal.

The sprawling center is, to quote Lt. Santucci, "a city in itself."

It's complete: clinic and dental facilities, mess hall, bakery, fire depart-ment, boiler and laundry

Inmates tend the acres of barley and vegetables and the cattle and swine. The crops and livestock are used at the jail, sup-plementing the $800,000 yearly food budget.

Inmates are grouped into the sentenced and unsentenced. California law requires that the two not be mixed — "Never. In anything," we were told: meals, recreation, transportation, work crews. "Never."

Those two groups are divided again into minimum, medium and maximum security. The latter are in Greystone; "East Greystone" for the un-sentenced, "West" for those serving their time.

Greystone prisoners, according to the deputies accompanying us, are quite often the easiest to deal with.

"They've served their time in the state penitentiary and this is a cake walk for them."

KQED's suit rose from the suicide of an East Greystone inmate. Suicides are "unfortunate," Santucci said, Cordon adding it would be necessary, forwarded to Fairmont Hospital. The suicide who trig-gered KQED's suit was not in the quiet cell. He hung himself in a regular cell, under the catwalk used by night guards as they patrol the labyrinth of Greystone.

A suicide or a homosexual attack "takes only minutes," Santucci re-sponded when asked "how" it could have hap-pened, "with the catwalks and the guards and all."

Controversial issue draws little public comment

Supervisors' redistricting party not too popular

Alameda County Bureau OAKLAND - The Alameda County Board of Supervisors held a hearing Tuesday hardly anybody came.

The hearing dealt with re-districting, which is usually a controversial political hot potato. If Tuesday's sparsely attended session is any indication, however, reapportionment is not a matter of burning public interest.

The board reviewed the six alternate proposals prepared by Supervisor Tom Bates, listened to comments from six citizens and adjourned the matter until Aug. 5, when they hope to make a decision on one of the plans or a modification thereof.

Chairman Fred Cooper told the audience the board will not please everyone with whatever decision it comes to. "One man's gerrymander is another man's community of interest," he added.

He also noted that redistricting will occur again after the 1980 census and possibly sooner, if a county charter amendment to increase the number of supervisorial districts to seven is placed on next year's ballot and approved by the voters. Art Flegal, a Piedmont councilman, urged the board

It was dark outside when FatRat finally heard the front door bang.

At last! Somebody was home! Now maybe he could be let out of his cage! He had been in there all afternoon and he was getting mighty tired of that prickly litter. FatRat put his tiny pink paws on the door of his cage and rattled it. He stuck his nose between the bars and wiggled his whiskers. He moved his nose between two other bars and wiggled his whiskers again. He watched the bedroom door with his eager pink eyes.

He could hardly wait to get out of that cage!

Just then the latch was pushed in. Hooray! He FatRat waddled up the side of the cage onto the wire roof. He sat at the edge of the roof a minute, his nose twitching. Then he took a flying leap onto Kevin's bed. Was that great! Kevin's bed was bouncy and soft. It was easy for FatRat to hang off the edge, digging his nails into the mattress edge to hold on. He hung off one edge, sniffing and looking down at the blue rug. Then he ran to another edge and hung off there.

Ah! A pile of children's clothes! Maybe Kevin and his sister Rachel were back from vacation! FatRat stuck his head into the pile of clothes and sniffed hard.
But he didn't smell children smells of sugarless gum and pebbles from the creek. Instead he smelled laundromat smells of soap and bleach. The pile of clothes was sliding, but brave Fat-

Disappointed, he hopped off the pile just as everything collapsed to the floor.

All of a sudden FatRat was bored again. He was tired of exploring the bed. There was nothing to do except be scratched behind the ears by Mommy, and that wouldn't last long.

FatRat found himself being lifted into the air and carried across the hall. He was set down in a small room with white linoleum floor and a damp green rug. The door closed. "There!" said Mommy. "Maybe you can find something different to do in here!"

She threw her clothes in a heap on the floor. She knew FatRat liked to hide in them, so it gave her an excuse to be sloppy.

But today the chubby brown-and-tan rat was feeling adventuresome. He jumped up onto the slippery edge of the bathtub and scampered along

All of a sudden water started coming down out of the shower. FatRat didn't like that. He gave himself a bath with his tongue, twice a day. He didn't need any hot shower. Especially not one with herbal shampoo, grapefruit-scented soap and cream rinse.

So he hopped over into a box that held cedar shingles. He had heard Mommy saying she was going to shingle the bathroom some day. She had been saying that since January.

Then he spotted the straw wastebasket filled

He took one of the big leaps he had been perfecting.

Bam! Over went the basket!

FatRat was scared. He hid under the clothes because he figured he would get yelled at. But Mommy was behind the shower curtain. "Having a good time, FatRat?" she called out.

FatRat was deciding he'd had enough of that bathroom. He stuck his pointed nose under the door and wiggled it along til he found a place where it cleared the threshhold by two inches. He squashed himself flat against the floor and pushed with his back feet. He squeezed himself right under that door.

WOW! He was free! Far out! The whole house was at his paws. Should he check out the kitchen garbage bag? Nibble on a plant? Cuddle up on the sofa?

Just opposite was the children's bedroom, where his cage was on the rug, its door open invitingly.

FatRat could smell the seeds and lettuce and especially the little bit of egg and cheese that were in there for his dinner. When he waddled a little closer, he could see his comfortable bed, which he had made himself by shredding a shoe box and bunching up some tissues.

By the time the shower sounds had stopped,
FatRat was curled up in his bed, dreaming about his next flying leap.

No flag may be displayed in a position above or equal to the American flag, with two exceptions: the United Nations flag flies above all others at U.N. headquarters in New York City and the church pennant flies above the U.S. flag while naval chaplains conduct church services at sea.

Japan finds itself in real energy bind

TOKYO (AP) - The Japanese are caught in an energy strait jacket without much hope of soon escaping the powerful grip of a few big oil exporters and the major international oil companies.

The Japanese have been trying to find a way out of the predicament, but have concluded there is no easy answer. Experts believe about all they can do is gradually diversify their foreign energy sources

This is in contrast to the United States, which has plans to achieve substantial energy independence in 10 years. Even Europe has its booming North Sea oil fields and major coal reserves.

Nearly every aspect of Ja-pan's low profile diplomacy now takes into consideration the amazingly narrow foundation of energy supplies for the world's No. 3 economic frontations between oil producers and consumers, but they also have cast their lot with most of the world's other rich nations by joining the U.S.-inspired International Energy Agency.

New snags in Blackhawk

By CATHY TALLYN Times Staff Writer

DANVILLE - There's a new snag in the "game plans" worked out between two groups battling over the proposed Blackhawk development reorganization referendum.

The Secretary of State's office reports the opponents of the referendum, Citizens for Park Expansion, haven't met the requirements of Proposition 9.

The Citizens oppose the placing of the reorganization of service districts within the proposed 4,200-unit Blackhawk development in the San Ramon Valley on the November ballot.

The Friends of Mt. Diablo have fanned out through the county to collect the necessary 30,000 signatures to get the measure on the ballot.

However, the Friends found they can't circulate petitions in Mt. Diablo

The Friends object to this and what they say is harassment the Citizens have dealt them.

Robert Blasier of the district attorney's fair political practices office had said earlier he would suggest guidelines for both groups to follow.

According to District Attorney William O'Malley, Blasier apparently has decided not to give any recommendationson proceedures.

The Citizens group was formed shortly after the Friends group was established.

Friends contend the huge Blackhawk project could cost taxpayers, is inconsistant with the county general plan, could upset the ecology of Mt. Diablo and the land could be better used.

According to Proposition 9, which went into effect in January, political organizations are required to file with the state if they receive or spend $500 or more and if their measure goes on the

If the $500 hasn't been spent or received, the organization doesn't have to file, Nancy Saltzman of the state fair practices office said.

The committee has 10 days to file,

If the group then qualifies for the ballot, it again must file with the Secretary of State's office, Ms. Saltzman said.

A check with the Secretary of State's office revealed the Committee for Park

Expansion had filed nothing. In its first press release, one of the group's organizers, Daniel Van Voorhis, referred to the group as the Committee for Park Expansion.

Van Voorhis is also the attorney for the Blackhawk Development Compa-

The group uses the name Citizens for Park Expansion on its literature.

Under the Citizens for Park Expansion, the Secretary of State's office found a notation that the group had not filed correctly.

A spokesman explained the office had sent the Citizens a letter July 7, informing the group the letter it sent did not meet the law's requirements and it would have to file a new form.

"Willfully or wrongly" failing to file is a misdemeanor, Ms. Saltzman said. The group can also be liable for not more than the amount of money they should have reported, she added.

The Secretary of State's office reported the Friends of Mt. Diablo had Van Voorhis said he mailed the statement of his group's campaign July 2 "within the 10 days" and "hadn't gotten a number back" from the state. The state assigns each group that files a number. Van Voorhis said he has heard that the district attroney's office isn't going to draw up guidelines for his group or the Friends to follow.

Friends have complained to the district attorney's office they are being harassed by the people being paid $5 an hour by Blackhawk to present the developer's side.

"A good number of people are getting hasse d," Linda Moody, one of the organizers of Friends, said. There are a lot of cases of our people being followed in cars. "One woman and her daughter were followed in Orinda to a dead-end street and they got out of their car and hid behind a bush until they left," she said. Van Voorhis said he thinks Blasier was convinced the Citizens were doing everything possible to avoid the con-frontations Friends alleged happened. The charges by Friends "are designed to whip the public into a frenzy," Van Voorhis said. He added when his workers do show up to present Blackhawk's side the Friends leave The Citizens, organized by Van Voorhis and various labor leaders, contend the development won't actually be on Mt. Diablo, but in hidden valleys and won't be a drain on the taxpayer. It also argues the referendum could jeopardise an agreement between Blackhawk and the state to give 2,000 acres to the state park.

Regarding the tactics being employed by the Citizens' "truth squads," Van Voorhis said, "We've got to follow them to know where they're going.

"If these people feel they can't stand the heat of democratically carrying on dialogue they better look at their facts again," he added.

The Citizens have complained to the district attorney's office that the Friends have misrepresented the iss-District Attorney O'Malley said his office is mainly concerned that there be no confrontations. He said there wasn't sufficient information to warrant initiating criminal action in the matter. O'Malley added other legal approaches are open to both parties.

Van Voorhis said the Citizens group hasn't ruled out getting an injunction seeking damages from the Friends.

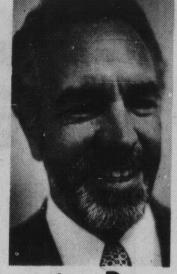

Van Voorhis said he's mainly con-cerned that Friends "clean up their act" and print new literature. He characterized his committee as 'democracy in action" and said that workers are "super careful to avoid confrontations." Attorney Moody said she's concerned that free speech was being interupted when store owners ask them to leave because of incidents arising when the Citizens are there. She's also concerned about them not

DOVE SEASON sure looks promising as there are plenty of the little grey ghosts in the valley and all over the state. There will be a split 46-day season with the usual limit of 10 per day with 20 in possession after open-

It is proposed that dove season would open Sept. 1 and run through the month, according to the Department of Fish and Game. It would reopen Nov. 22 and run through Dec. 7. Dove populations have remained relatively stable for the last decade, based on hunter survey information and population call-counts.

Shooting hours for both doves and pigeons would be one-half hour before sunrise to sunset.

California hunters bagged an estimated 4,551,100 doves during last season, an increase of about five per cent from that for the previous year.

Imagine how many rounds were fired by hunters to bag that many doves. It probably averages out to about

High salaried public servants

Governor Brown's lament at the spiraling wage scale enjoyed by the state's college administrators was a timely reminder of an old problem. The trouble is, the governor should not stop with just the top echelon of our university system.

It has always amazed those of us who have occasion to delve into such matters that the argument used in offering one public servant an extremely generous salary boost is one which suggests, "if we don't pay him what he asks, he will go to the next city (or school district or county) and get at least that, or maybe more."

It is not just the ability, or productivity, of a particular individual which guides that person's salary level; it is the constant fear (and threat?) that "we'd better meet his demands if we don't want to lose him."

The school boards that administer the Livermore, Murray and Pleasanton school systems have all experienced challenges of this sort in recent times. In Pleasanton's a case, a district superintendent who was under contract at a salary in excess of $32,000 a year sought to break that contract "in order to accept a much better offer from the Santa Clara school system." In this instance the Pleasanton board did not yield, but neither was the incumbent administrator made to live up to his contract. He simply moved across the Bay, boosted his income by some $10,000 a year, and left the local district to scramble for an eleventh-hour replacement to fill that ost.

The cancer does not stop there. No doubt the interviews with a successor to that office were strongly flavored with the memory of "the one that got away because we wouldn't pay him enough." And if the replacement is given any kind of a financial incentive, then what about his assistant who "has served us well for all these years." And what about HIS assistant, and the principals and vice principals ... all of whom are tied, one way or another, to the highest salary paid one of their numbers.

The same is true for the city's administrative structure, which is less frightening for the generous income package given the highest member of that corps, than for the great numbers of his staff that are also paid in excess of $20,000 per year, simply because of "the ladder."

In none of this do we suggest that all public employees are over-paid. But there must come a time when those public servants, who work for us, should not expect and income that is often well in excess of the average earned by the members of the governing board which hires and administers that individual.

It concerns Governor Brown that there are state college administrators making $10,000 more than Californians pay their governor. There ought to be some similar yardstick applied at the local level.

At a time when we are all trying desperately to keep the community system afloat, including drastic cutbacks in the numbers of those local servants, we might also look at the top of that payroll, and start wondering "who sets those salary levels, and what kind of performance do we demand for our money?"

Marijuana laws

Editor, The Times:

Perhaps your editorial and/or personal opinion is not determined only by the objective medical facts concerning marijuana, but I'm sure you wish to be as completely informed on them also as you possibly can.

The only medical questions that have still been subject to serious discussion concern long-term effects, and to a lesser degress some paychological effects. This study, reviewed here in the last issue of "AAAS Science," quite thoroughly answers nearly all remaining scientific questions, including the so-called "a motivational syndoome," which is shown to be a fiction, or an effect unrelated to marijuana.

It would be reassuring of our faith in the objectivity of journalism if equal prominence were given to studies of this sort, rather than those adverse ones usually quickly discoedited, such as I have recently referred to.

Hope you will see fit to recall and mention this study next time you get wire copy or other release on marijuana.

What happened to the construction on P street? As far as I can see everything has been stopped for several weeks. Do the railroads have so much clout with the city officials that they can practically shut down all traffic flow North and South in Livermore just to complete their rail line? We were told that this track relocation was to increase safety etc., etc. Have you tried to proceed down L street without being thrown into sheer panic by the jamming traffic? Ho boy, wait till the thousands of autos that travel Murrieta at the rush hours hit L street with it's traffic! No wonder auto insurance is

Cars yield to bikes!

As incredible as it might sound to died-in-the-wool drivers of motor cars, the auto is about to yield to other forms of transportation ... if governmental and civic leaders in the Greater Bay Area have their way.

According to a report released this week by Bank of America, public transit as well as economic and community pulse-measurers believe that "swift, efficient public transportation will improve land use, control urban growth, revitalize the central city, reduce air and noise pollution and smooth automobile traffic flow."

I can see Livermore Councilman Don Miller, the Sierra Club and others doing handsprings at the very mention of this.

In any event, the report spotlights four types of transportation currently under development in the state — fixed bus routes, dial-a-rides, carpools and bicycles. It discusses the means by which innovtive communities and groups are blazing transportation trails others can follow.

As cheery and positive as the report sounds, you can scratch Dial-a-Rides ... at least in the Bay Area. The system has been given a death notice effective Sept. 5 in Richmond. This follows closely on the heels of a similar system that was discontinued in Santa Clara County. In both instances the system was considered too expensive.

In the case of the Richmond system, it was attracting patrons under 25 years of age when it was originally thought of as largely a service for senior citizens. The system's 12 minibuses carried an average of 950 passengers a day ... seemingly not bad but still not sufficient to warrant continuation.

Yet, the report states that the "lowly bus" must lure people out of their cars. "Using existing highways, streets and roads, buses can travel to the remotest corner of the nation and do it tomorrow. Coaxing the public on board is the San Diego purchased 88 new coaches during 1974, 68 of them small 18-passenger shuttle buses. Next to be purchased are 45 extra-long buses that bend in the middle, enabling them to turn corners more easily.

On a smaller scale in Hayward, transon a smaller scale in Hayward, transportation is being provided for Head Start youngsters, the handicapped, mentally retarded and elderly, by a non-profit bus company run entirely by women. The Bay Area Transportation Corporation, formed six years ago with six buses, was intended to serve a dual purpose: provide jobs for low-income women and solve the transportation needs of the Head Start program. The company now has 21 buses, a staff of 18 women and a gross annual income exceeding $175,000.

Many advocates claim that carpools are the best immediate way to untangle traffic, improve the air and save gasoline.

In the Bay Area, a free, computerized carpooling service called RIDES has provided matches for more than 85 per cent of the 25,000 motorists who have applied. A similar system, Commuter Computer, operates in the Los Angeles Area.

The search for new modes of transportation has led to a revival of an old one—the bicycle. Livermore residents on routes between the Lawrence Livermore Lab and residential areas can attest to that. The bike is strictly recreational in most other parts of the wallow.

Special planning is required for bicycles to become a safe part of a community's transportation system. "No bicycle paths, no bicycles", one reference study concludes.

Palo Alto, for example, has constructed a 42-mile urban bicycle route including 13.5 miles of paths, and 28.5 miles of striped lanes.

Dublin residents recently got a bicycle path put in along busy Village Parkway, enabling many to travel a north-south route from Dublin Boulevard to the Alcosta Mall without having to constantly dodge Detroit hardware.

To our way of thinking, it'll be the latexpansion of present AC Transit lines within the valley that will prove the best short range plan.

What it really takes is citizen involvement. If bicycle routes and expanded AC service are the most realistic short-range transportation goals, then citizens should contact their elected representatives as well as the transportation companies to see that it comes about.

could the town

My first visit to Concord was something of an accident, very nearly my last. It was also my first confrontation with the "San Francisco-Oakland Bay Area," from behind the wheel of a car.

"You want to avoid all that Oakland-San Francisco congestion," friends had advised me. They plotted my route ... "go south on 99, swing over to Benicia, take the ferry, then pick up Highway 21 and down to 17 ..." Los Gatos was my destination. It was California before freeways, even before highways worthy of the title, and before directional signs, too. Local landmarks were your guide, local service stations were your salvation. I couldn't find one south of the Benicia ferry. That's how come I got lost in Concord.

My most vivid memory of the place was the confluence of what appeared to be six country county roads, all meeting at a great monument of sorts I met a rather large truck there. "We have accidents and near-accidents here almost every day," the smiling patrolman informed me. I was not comforted. "You ought to improve this intersection, and get rid of that stupid tower," I suggested.

Well Concord did improve that intersection along tower," I suggested.

Well, Concord did improve that intersection, along with a lot of other things. From the ill-defined hamlet of that post World War II era, Concord has grown to an ill-defined mass of some 100,000 souls. And a few without souls, I suspect.

The Concord we visited Sunday evening was a startling change from that hamlet of 30 summers ago. It was, I suspect, also a startling change from the Concord of just two summers ago. Concord is like that. A new edition every 12 months. But using much the same type.

Quick, now ... name two things for which Concord is Quick, now ... name two things for which Concord is well known! If you came up with "the SunValley shopping center and the Concord Summer Festival," you not only get an "A" ... you also got all the possible answers. But those two are enough, at least if you are a Concordian (Concordite?). Or whatever.

We sat alongside one of them at the Concord pavillion's Sunday evening show. (Actually we laid alongside him, and his whole blessed family. More on that later.)

To get there we retraced my journey of some 30 years ago. This time over a modern freeway, then along a divided boulevard, as far as Ygnacio Boulevard goes, and beyond,. The Concord Outdoor Pavillion is true to its name. It's even further out than Los Gatos.

"My, isn't this a pleasant hillside setting," she remarked. Fifteen hundred feet later, most of it at a 15 percent grade, she stopped saying that. Her breathing apparatus had mysteriously quit.

"At least we aren't carting camp chairs and boxes and sleeping bags like those other darned fools," I said, watching all the darned fools stride by. Another hasty judgement, I was soon to learn.

The Concord Pavillion comes in two parts. There is the basic structure — steel-trussed overhang, stage and some 2500 comfortable seats. Then there is the "rest of it" — spacious lawn area set bowl-like beyond that core, under the stars, as they say.

"Is this your idea of 'good seats'"? I asked. She was, for perhaps the first time in our marital lives, completely at a loss. "The man didn't mention anything about sitting on the grass when I ordered the tickets," she explained, weakly. And since all 2500 seats were sold out, there was nothing to do but stake out our claim to 13 square feet of lawn, and weit for the show.

"I wouldn't have worn my blue serge jacket with matching pants, had I known we were going to rough it," I said, never one to pass up an opportunity. It quickly dawned on us why so many people had brought heavy blankets, parkas, cushions and the like. Two hours later we would understand why some also packed in enough food to feed a small army. It was in fact a sizeable force, some 2000 lovers of ballet, viewing the Panovs of Russia while they munched away, huddled against the evening breezes, fortified to five degrees below freezing.

"Would you care for a hot roast beef sandwich?" asked the head of the family spread alongside. And, anticipating my response, then suggesting "perhaps an apple?"

Turned out they were dedicated Concordians. He had served on the committee. Knew all about the community verve that went into building that pavillion. He was also smart enough to dress for the late-evening elements. I suspected he was fortified inside, as well as out. Smart fella.

"It was a joint venture, using the city and the school district. Cost us $4.2 million total. We travelled all over the United States and Canada looking at outdoor pavillions before we bought the seats," he explained, with absolutely no prompting. I wanted to ask how come they hadn't extended the seats a few more rows up that grassy slope. But the Panovs were about to do their thing, and we settled on our piece of lawn, me in my two-piece blue, she in her classy red. We looked more displaced than the two Russians on stage.

"Would you care for a glass of red wine?" the talking Concord machine alongside asked. I was beginning to understand Concord. Given enough time, I might even grow to like the people.

He was 35 years old and had been out of high school more than half of that time but when his former track coach saw him in the distance, loping through the thinly populated east side of Phoenix and hopping over what fences obstructed his direct route with an easy, practiced grace.

"That's gotta be Chick Vihel," the track coach observed. "There's only one man in the world with a stride like his."

Some 35 years have passed since Vihel hurdled those fences on the way home, but at the tender age of 70 the young fellow is still running.

There are those who say he will still be going at a good clip when, some day in the distant, misty future, he decides to have a look at those lemonade trees on the other side of the mountain.

other side of the mountain.

Chick was personnel director for Goodyear Aircraft in Arizona when that former Jerome track coach spotted his easy gait a couple of hundred yards distant and has long since retired s assistant personnel director and head recruiter for Airesearch, another Phoenix firm.

His pasture is not one in which an unfettered suburban squire can roam free in the streets and fields near his home in Tempe.

Instead he roams through his retirement years as what is laughingly called a part time employe of the Arizona Department of Education.

He is a man with spring in his stride who never walks slowly. Bellieve me I know who recoff I speak. I tracked slowly. Bellieve me, I know whereof I speak. I trecked through the tortured streets of Jerome, along the giddy slopes of the Grand Canyon and through some small portion of an Arizona Indian reservation with Chick a couple of weeks ago.

Spotting him a dozen years I came up winded and Spotting him a dozen years I came up winded and begging for mercy at the end of the first lap.

chick is a native of Jerome, the son of a miner who died before he reached 50 after inhaling too much silicone while laboring in the glory hole of the copper mine which was the only possible reason for hanging a village of 15,000 so precipitously on the edge of Mingus mountain.

He is also my brother-in-law and not a good fellow with whom to argue because he is lean and supple as a rawhide quirt and hard as the granite face of El Capitan, a monolithic chunk of stone which rises in polished splendor from the floor of California's Yosemite valley and which could, I fear, be lost completely and forever if dropped into that monsterous ravine we know as the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

Chick is an educator by trade, a graduate of Arizona State University who holds a master's degree from the University of Arizona and once was assistant superintendant schools of Maricopa County which is where the city of Phoenix resides.

For reasons of his own he drifted into personnel work for private industry and stayed there for years, forsaking, among other things, an instructorship at the university.

Industry and education as you and I know them, were not always his goal. At the age of 18 and freshly graduated from high school Chick worked proudly, though not always his goal. At the age of 18 and freshly graduated from high school Chick worked proudly, though in a menial status, for the copper mine which supported the town and looked forward to the day when he could take his proper place in the deep shafts which produce the rich ore.

He descended into that shaft when he was 21 working

He descended into that shaft when he was 21, working with a diamond drill and probably some dust in his lungs while he discovered there were better things in life than forcing the business end of a metal bit into the grudging shell of Mingus Mountain.

He was good at his trade and made big money for those distant days, using his funds for an education at Arizona State.

A decade or so later the road might have been easier for Vihel, though I am not all sure he would have accepted the simple solution offered by an athletic scholarship.

Chick was a four year letterman in track and basketball, a hurdler, naturally, and probably a master of the back court on the hardwood.

Perhaps he got a little help because of his athletic ability, though I doubt it equalled in any way the bonanza which would have been his in another era.

I don't know how much his athletic career affected

Chick's life. He is one of the best known men in Arizona and certainly the skill he exhibited on the cinder paths and hardwood did not in any way throw a roadblock in the way of success.

There are signs, however, that whatever else happened, Chick would have been big in his native state.

There is a framed certificate of appreciation on the wall of the Vihel dining room, a scroll with a drawing of smiling Chick Vihel in the center and the signiture of hundreds of Arizona's most prominent citizens sur-

Don't ask me how Chick became the way he is today. Folks from Arizona seem to have a lot of energy. My wife is tireless. Half my life is spent with guilt feelings because I cannot keep pace with her.

Tom Knoles, brother of a former Pleasanton baker and of Tully Knoles, who for years was president of the College of the Pacific, (now UOP), is 93 and spry as the rabbits who nibble in the alfafa field he mows once a week in the summertime.

Perhaps there is something in the air, a resistance developed while battling the blistering breath of summer.

Whatever the case, they come tough in Arizona and Chick is one of the toughest.

He has never lost his love, or his desire to return, for Jerome, that reviving ghost town which is slowly sliding down the side of Mingus Mountain.

He gave me a guided tour through the village I will

He gave me a guided tour through the village I will never forget and I'll share it with you soon.

First I had to tell you about Chick, a man who doesn't seem to know a fellow should settle down and relax a little after having lived through three score and ten years.

West thought a long time about his opening lead. He finally came to the conclusion that some one could ruff a heart lead, but that East's double had to be based on one of the black aces. If he held the club ace it would keep; if he held the ace of spades, it might be important to lead to it right away.

Therefore, West opened the spade. East did hold the ace. but unfortunately it turned out that dummy was void of spades. South fanned his hand for the grand slam.

North's bidding has been both brilliant and successful. He could have jumped right to six diamonds, but he wanted to buy the hand there so he bid just five. Then when West went to six hearts North felt he had to save at seven diamonds.

East had no idea that there was any danger of South making seven diamonds and he was not interested in seven hearts. Hence he doubled seven diamonds.

East really should not have doubled. If he had passed the chances are that West would have bid seven hearts on the theory that it just might make. North might well have opened a club and the heart grand slam would have come in.

Ask the Jacobys

A reader from Indiana sent us today's hand with the question: 'How should it have been bid and played?" We discussed it some in the article, but the answer to the question is that no one knows. Good bidding is based on the study of thousands and thousands of hands. Freak hands occur so seldom that everyone has to guess when bidding them.

(Do you have a question for the Jacobys? Write "Ask the Jacobys" care of this newspaper. The most interesting questions will be used in this column and writers will receive copies of JACOBY MODERN.)

A radiation measure

Lab experiment flies with spacecraft

When the Apollo astronauts take off to rendezvous with the Soviet cosmonauts, a little bit of Livermore will go

Lawrence Livermore Laboratory scientists have devised an experiment to record and measure the cosmic radiation that is surmised to have caused the strange flashes of light experienced by previous astronauts.

Engineers, headed by Royce Eckard and Ted Wieskamp of the Electronics Engineering Department, began working on the project along with Dr. Thomas Budinger of theLawrence Berkeley Laboratory over a year ago.

The biggest problem was developing the lightest possible detector of the so-called "heavy ions" that are believed to cause the flashes by reacting with the astronauts' optic nerve.

Two detectors are needed on board the Apollo spaceship and with weight at a premium, it was necessary to cast the aluminum chassis out of a single block of metal, rather than weld separate pieces.

Also, the electronics system within the detectors has to be very sensitive to record the passage of the cosmic radiation and that, too, was designed at LLL.

It is believed that the flashes are caused by "heavy ions" that normally are screened out by the atmosphere before reaching the earth's surface. However, in recent years the same ions have been used in cancer

Heavy ions are simply the nuclei of the lighter elements (carbon, lithium, etc.) that have been stripped of their electrons. They are termed "heavy" ions because they are much more massive than that are normally encoun-

Although the heavy ions exist in outer space, their effect on the astronauts beyond the flashes of light on the retina are uncertain. Those flashes could be just the tip of the iceberg in terms of the effect they have on astronauts, and the LLL experiment will help determine just how dangerous it is to travel in space.

Presently heavy ions are used at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory for experimental treatments of cancer and advanced forms of

It is hoped the results of the experiments on board the Apollo mission will throw further light on the future of heavy ion treatment of cancer as well as determining just how dangerous spaceflight is to an astronaut.

"There is no disagree-ment" about this, he said. But, in a speech prepared for the Upper Midwest Council of Minneapolis, Kissinger said critics of detente must answer these questions:

'What is the alternative that they propose? What precise policies do they want us to change? Are they prepared for a prolonged situation of dramatically increased international danger? Do they wish to return to the constant crises and high arms budgets of the cold war!

'Does detente encourage repression — or is it detente that has generated the ferment and the demands for openness that we are now witnessing? Can we ask our people to support confrontation unless they know that every reasonable alternative has been explored?'

Kissinger cited space flight as an area in which the United States and the Soviet Union saw themselves "in almost mortal rivalry" 15
